This is a casual Match-3 game. The little cat is a white-space artist, and her gallery shows her paintings over the past year. Instead, his paintings are flooded with "color sprites" who move in a certain way. The little cat then travels through the world of her artwork, firing "color sprites" cannon balls in various ways to eliminate the "color sprites" before they move out the picture. It sounds like Zuma. But there are lots of differences between them. The "color sprites" can morph into any familiar object, such as flowers, fruit, balloons, etc. At least two identical "color sprites" can be eliminated by touching. "Color sprites" don't follow exactly the trajectory, they can be knocked off track and even be crashed out of the picture. There are 100 "color sprites" flowing into the screen in each level. Eliminate 60 of them to complete the level. Of course, the higher the score, the better.

Follow the cat through one year, four seasons, 12 months, 48 levels of wonderful adventure!
+++++ Tips: 1. In the gallery, click on the title below each painting to enter the highest game progress for that month. At the top of each painting, the small light bulb that has been lit can also be clicked to enter the corresponding level. Small flashing light bulbs represent levels to be crossed. You can't click if it's not lit. 2. If you succeed in all 48 levels, a small certificate will appear in the gallery praising your efforts. +++++

Warnings: 1. WhiteWash only supports Steam Achievements in Windows and MacOS temporarily. 2. WhiteWash displays best in the resolution ratio for 16:9.

Features Key:

CFS World- This new and unique mode has been specially designed to immerse players into the darkest corners of our online world, where the full force of the CFS will be applied to any civ that might threaten the safety of your entire country... or worse. This is the ultimate apocalypse mode that will leave you with a permanent case of the shivers (and will likely end with you returning to your computer, bug-eyed and ready for the next game). Enjoy a true third-person shooter adventure into the treacherous darkness of a dark and dangerous world that is constantly evolving.

Randomized Day/Night- Reach for the stars as the sun makes its ascent and sets again, regardless of the time of year and which hour your U.S. time zone happens to fall under. With this new ability, Cold Wars is giving us a large leap forward in how we can immerse our players into true and frightening unfamiliar territories.

Free-for-all PvP Modes- Becoming more and more popular with every new release, Randomized Day/Night, random continent changes and persistent free-for-all modes will be an absolute bonanza for some of the most aggressive and merciless players online. This is also one of the few games that allows true host-controlled, free-for-all of the most popular PvP modes, allowing the player to call their shots and charge at their enemies unlike ever before.

Online Multiplayer - We are extremely proud that Cold War has given its players the option to play online against each other in multiplayer modes. This is definitely something we would have never thought to include into the game in its initial development. Enjoy all the new free warfare without the restrictions of having to play in offline matches.

Immerse yourself in an all-out VR experience with Optional VR Mode- The possibilities are endless!

Achievements!- There are the possibilities that gamers will be able to jump up after playing the game for some time and be rewarded for their accomplishments. These will include new skills and weapon efficiencies to be gained from achievements, and these are made possible by cutting-edge technology still nonexistent and all our developers calling up

Beside the standard modes (assault/defence/balance) described above, to get a feel of 'Pov' gaming, I have found two of the best modes in my opinion: "Fatigue" mode. The battle results are reported per planet only. Fatigue is a measure of your total health, and fatigue is accumulated by every world in your fleet until you lose. This gives you something of a mini-Jules Verne situation, where you are rushing to build more industrial bases and capturing more worlds, but also having to manage your overall health. The "Gallery" mode. In this mode you can play a campaign in semi-storyline format, but with very linear endgame. Each of your worlds has a mini-campaign, with its own story, ending with a huge final assault against another hostile fleet. What's new? Please note that the 'type II' planetary effect tech sites have been switched off for this patch, in order to allow the developers to put more effort into the larger 'type III' effects on the next patch. The type III effects can still be researched, but you can't get tech sites for them. Systems with anomalies have larger stock of fleet resources, so you can build larger fleets faster. Fuel in each system is calculated in respect to world size. Small worlds have low fuel and need to spend it all on defending themselves. Large worlds are able to build more ships to spare for construction, so spend their fuel on delivering new life to the universe. Full list of changes in v0.1.1 - 'T3' effect sites added to Shipyards (now you can make pretty ships...) - Broad Spectrum weapons changed to work the same way as manual weapons - Rebels now have a chance of surrendering if they get to the end of the campaign, giving them a chance to save their life - 'C' flag on your space station can be used to instantly join a combat action of a nearby world - 'L' flag on your ships can be used to instantly return to a world, even if it is involved in a combat action - 'A' flag on your ships can be used to instantly recall them to a world when in combat - 'I' flag on your ships cannot be used to initiate combat - 'O' flag on your ships can be used to immediately withdraw your ship fleet from combat - Planet impact effects in Hi-res mode - System view improvements -

s While there are currently no known viral or bacterial pathogens that inhabit our many volumes of earth, GALAXY Corporation does fully support the belief that there may be civilizations out there in Space that may contain both technologically advanced beings and pathogens that may infect humans. Examples of such pathogens that could potentially transmit their genetic material to a newly colonized world include plasmids, viruses, prions, mutations and pathogens. Since this database will keep a wide variety of pathogens, we will have to be prudent in how we approach storing and retrieving them. We will have to ensure that we follow strict guidelines in securing our database including:

Guaranteed retention period: All live pathogens, including cataloged pathogens will be retained on this database for one year from the time they have been cataloged. Only retain cataloged pathogens: Strictly define a cataloged pathogen as a found-dead organism that is determined or suspected to be hazardous to humans. Pathogens which are found-dead that are determined or suspected not to be hazardous to humans will be stored in the GALAXY database. Require unique serial codes: A unique, sequential number will be assigned to each specimen and pathogen cataloged. These numbers will be unique as to each cataloged pathogen. Pathogens found-dead will have no unique serial codes. Centralized hosting: All storage will be done in the GALAXY database. No other Sermo™ databases or computer drives will be associated with this database. All stored specimens will be under the protection and umbrella of this exclusive database. Patient consent: All patient consent will be obtained on all cataloged specimens and pathogens. Regardless of the age of the specimen or knowledge of the patient's etiology, all patient consent must be obtained at the time of collection. In the case of hand-collected pathogen specimens, the owner of the specimen will be consulted on the duration and extent of patient consent. The inevitable consequence of these requirements are that the vast majority of found-dead pathogen specimens found in the woods, at the park, in our homes, in the streets, on the grocery store floor, at the pier or in people's backyards will never be cataloged. Pathogens found dead: A cataloging system is currently in
