Bios Agent Crack Serial Key 2013.Q: Python and Flask: Requests session doesn't work I am trying to use requests to login the user in the flask application. In javascript I have created a object like this var req1 = new requests.Session(); req1.post("", { 'username':'jeff', 'password':'test' }).then(function(response1){ // success response console.log(response1.status_code) }); req1.get("").then(function(response2){ // success console.log(response2.status_code) }); and on the server end I just need to store all the requests as @app.route('/', methods=['GET']) def index(): resp=request.get('/api/login') resp.request.session.set_test('test') print resp.request.session.test resp=request.get('/api/read') print resp.request.session.test But I am not able to get the proper request.session.test printed on the server side. Not only do I not see the proper result, but I am also unable to get any request data from the python server like post/get/session. Can someone point me to the possible issue with requests and the flask app? I am running flask/pyramid app on localhost:5000 A: It seems your are not using the standard session. You can refer to the
